TL Notes:

T/N The sales lady at the start of this chapter continually uses the humble pronoun, "my poor/insignificant self" but it seems like it'd get annoying so I've changed it to "I" Also, don't know if it's worth mentioning, but the one she uses is traditionally male

*T/N. Pronounced Yun'er I've never seen it as a name before, but whatever Translates to "Fairness/Allow children"

*T/N. Shengnan translates as "Victory Male", Jiang is just a common surname.

T/N Situ Lielong / the first name literally translates to "Fierce Dragon", last name is unusual, one of the few compound surnames still present in modern times. It originates in one of the three most important positions in the Han Dynasty (Three Excellencies) usually translated as "Minister over the Masses"

*T/N In English (regarding the snake), it's a Bungarus. [en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Bungarus] But that doesn't sound as cool.

*Regarding the Money system:

10 cashes (wen) = 1 candareen (fen)
10 candareens = 1 mace (qian)
10 maces = 1 tael (liang)
AKA
1000 cashes = 1 tael

We decided to use the transhteration of this, which is Wen. The official Translation is Cashes which we thought would be too confusing It's actually an old Asian currency system. >__< Note, it hasnt said which time period this is in, so we dont know how much money (in USD) theyre talking about. ^^ Old Chinese currency is complicated to say the least ^^,

Please read this first, some of the dialogue wont make sense otherwise.
